About Carl

Carl Safina's writing explores how humans are changing the living world, and what the changes mean for non-human beings and for us all. His work fuses scientific understanding, emotional connection, and a moral call to action. He grew up raising pigeons, training hawks and owls, and spending as many days in the woods and on the water as he could. Safina is now the first Endowed Professor for Nature and Humanity at Stony Brook University and founding president of the Safina Center. He hosted the PBS series Saving the Ocean, and his writing appears in The New York Times, TIME, The Guardian, Audubon, Yale e360,

National Geographic and more. Safina has authored ten books including the New York Times Bestseller Beyond Words: What Animals Think and Feel. His most recent book is Alfie & Me: What Owls Know, What Humans Believe. He lives on Long Island, New York, with his wife Patricia and their dogs and feathered friends.
